CINCINNATI HYDROPATHIC OR Water Cure Establishment.

Water Cure Establishment.

The above Institution is now open for the reception of patients. It is located about five miles from the city, on the Carthage pike, and but a few rods from the Hamilton, Cincinnata and bayton Raliroad, in the rear and at the same distance from the Miami Canal, in the front, rendering it casy of access to those desirous og enjoying the henefits of the Institution.

To the lover of nature, ow parts of the country can furnish a more pleasing variety of scenery than appeads itself before the traveller all, the way from Cincinnati to the Cure. There nature and art combine, rendering the view beautiful beyond description.

The new, large, and beautiful Edifice displays the taste of the artist at a glance, The neatness and clegance of the interior, combined with the numerous attractions which present themselves to the invalid, cannot fail to render this Establishment a desirable one. The Halls are extensive, the Rooms spacious and inviting, where the invalid can range at pleasure, free from atmospheric influences, in inclement weather. The Bed Rooms are ample and commodious, being convenient for the application of water, in every form. In connection with the Institution there is Gynnasium, Hall, seventy-five feet long, where patients as Gynnasium, Hall, seventy-five feet long, where patients strength by healthful exercise. The Springs which firmish the water for this establishment, are clear, pure, soft and abundant; flowing from a gravelly bed, they send forth water both cold and delicious. The country and neighborhood are remarkable for healthfulness, purity of air, and variety of scenery. All things combined, we cannot think of a more desirable place, for those seeking health, than this Institution.

Fortunes of a Country Girl. A HISTORICAL ROMANCE.

One day, I will not say how many years ago, for intend to be very mysterious for a time with my eaders—a young woman stepped from a country vagon which had just arrived at the yard gate of he famous Chelsen Inn, the Goat and Compasses, a name formed by corrupting the pious original, "God encompasseth us." The young woman a name formed by corrupting the pious original, "God encompasseth us." The young woman seemed about the age of eighteen, and was decently dressed, though in the plainest rustic fashion of the times. She was well formed and well looking, both form and look giving indications of the ruddy health consequent upon exposure to sun and air in the country. After stepping from the wagon, which the driver immediately led into a court yard, the girl stonned for a moment in surgest users. the girl stopped for a moment in apparent uncer-tainty whither to go, when the mistress of the inn, who had come to the door, observed her hesitation, and asked her to enter and take rest. The young woman readily obeyed the invitation, and soon, by the kindness of the landlady, found herself by the reside of a nicely sanded parlor, wherewithal to refresh herself after a long and tedious journey.

"And so my poor girl," said the landlady, after having, in return for her kindness, the whole particulars of the young woman's situation and history, "so thou hast come all this way to seek service; and hast thou no friend but John Hodge, the wag-oner? True, he is like to give thee but small help towards getting a place."
"Is service, then, difficult to be had?" asked the "is service, then, difficult to be had?" asked the young woman sadly.

"Ah, marry, good situations, at least, are hard to find. But you have a good heart child," said the landlady, and as she continued, she looked around with an air of pride and dignity: "thou seest what I come to myself; I left the country a young thing like thyself, with as little to look to. But 't isn't every one for a certain, that must look for such a fortune, and in any case it work be wrought for ortune, and in any case it must be wrought for .-I showed myself a good servant, before my poor old Jacob, Heaven rest his soul, made me mistress of the Goat and Compasses. So mind thee girl—" The landlady's speech might have gone on a long way, for the dame loved well the sound of her own ougue; but for the interruption occasioned by the entrance of a gentleman, when the landlady rose and welcomed him heartily.

"Ah, dame!" said the new comer, who was a stout, respectable attired person of middle age, "how salls the good ale? Scarcely a drop left in the cellar, I hope?"
"Brough left to give your worship a draught after your long walk," and she rose to fulfil the promise implied by her words.

"I walked not," was the gentlemen's reply; "but look a pair of oars, dame, down the river. Thou knowest I always come to Chelsea myself to see if thou lackest anything," a link 3 // which way of doing business that you have made yourself, as all the city says, the richest man in the Brewer's Corporation, if not in all London itself." "Well, daine, the better for me if it be so," said

"Well, daine, the better for me in the se,," said the brewer with a smile; "but let his have the mug, and this quiet pretty friend of thine shall pleasure us, mayhap, by tasting with us."

The landlady was not long in procuring a stoop of ale, knowing that her visitor never set an ex-ample hurtful to his own interests by countenancing the consequence of foreign spirits. the consumption of foreign spirits.
"Right, hostess," said the brewer when he had tasted it, "well made and well kept, and that is giving both thee and me our dues. Now, pretty lrink to thy sweetheart's health." The poor country girl to whom this was addressed, declined the proffered civility, and with a blush; but the landlady exclaimed, "Come, sitly weach, drink his worship's health; be is more likely to get thee a service, if it so please him, than John Hodge, one," said he, filling one of the measures or glasses which had been placed beside the stop, "wilt thou he wagoner." (i) "The girl has come many a mile," continued the ostess, "to seek a place in town, that she may ourden her family no more at home." the brought a character with her, or can you spake for her dame?"

"She has never yet been from home, sir, but her face is her character," said the kind-hearted lady; "I'll warrant she will be diligent and trusty."

"Upon thy prophesy, hostess, I will take her into ny service; for but yesterday my house-keeper was complaining of the want of help, since this deputyhip brought me more in the way of entertaining the people of the ward."

Ere the wealthy brewer and deputy left the Goat and Compasses, arrangements were made for sending the country girl to his house in the city on the following day. Proud of having done a tion, the garrulous hostess took advanta circumstance, to deliver an immensely rangue to the young woman on her new duties, and on the dangers to which youth is exposed in large cities. The girl heard her benefactress with modest thankfulness, but a more minute observer than the good landlady might have seen in the eye and countenance of the girl a quiet firmness of expres-sion, such as might have induced the cutting short of the lecture. However, the landlady's lecture had an end, and towards the evening of the day following her arrival at the Goat and Compasses, the youthful rustic found herself installed as housemaid in the dwelling of the rich brewer. On The fortunes of this girl it is our purpose to fol-low. The first change which took place in her condition subsequent to that related, was her elevation to the vacated post of housekeeper in the brewer's family. In this situation she was brought more than formerly in contact with her master, who found ample means of admiring her propriety of conduct, as well as her skillful economy and manconduct, as well as her skillful economy and management. By degrees he began to find her presence necessary to his happiness, and being a man of both honorable and independent mind, he at length-offered her his hand. It was accepted, and she who but four or five years before, left her country home bare-footed, became the wife of one of the richest citizens of London?

For many years Mr. Aylesbury, for such was the name of the brewer, and his wife lived in happiness and comfort together. He was a man of good family and connections, and consequently of higher breeding than his wife could boast, but on no oc-casion had he to blush for the partner he had cho-sen. Her calm inborn strength, if not dignity of character, conjoined with an extreme quickness of perception, made her fill her place at her husband's table with as much grace and credit, as if she had been born to the station. And, as time ran on, the respectability of Mr. Aylesbury's position rethe respectability of Mr. Aylesbury's position received a gradual increase. He became an alderman, and subsequently a sheriff of the city, and in consequence of the latter elevation, was knighted. Afterwards—and now part of the mystery projected at the commencement of this story, must be broken in upon, as far as time is concerned—afterwards the important place which the brewer held in this city, called upon him the attention and favor of the King, Charles the First, then anxious to conciliate the good will of the citizens, and the conciliate the good will of the citizens, and the knight received the further honor of baronetcy.
